

Food For the People!

- With a focus on personal and community health and wealth, Lincoln Hills Cares Food For The People! program is; A Wellness-Based, Higher Education and Career Readiness Program for High Risk Youth of Color and Low- Income Youth. Food for the People! (a partnership with Mo Betta Green Marketplace, El Laboratorio and Impact Empowerment Group) provides experiences and employment opportunities for a cohort of over 20 youth that include access to nature, food education, and wrap around social and emotional support services. The program cultivates youth resiliency while advancing food justice in the North-Northeast Denver Corridor.
- It takes a village to raise a thriving, resilient young adult. So we are banding together with some of the top grassroots organizations in Colorado working with youth of color to provide a model, integral youth development and food justice and equity program for low income youth of color from historical African American neighborhoods on the North-Northeast Denver Corridor. The program will advance resilient healthy bodies, resilient healthy minds and resilient healthy communities by:
 - Providing access to fresh, healthy food and nutrition.
 - Facilitating transformative experiences for youth in wild places and in safe and clean urban open spaces.
 - Year-round life coaching and wrap around mental health and social services support. High impact, community-led environmental health and restoration service projects.
